Dear Starcom21,

bben95 has just replied to a thread you have subscribed to entitled - Java program to decode DMR - in the Digital Voice Decoding Software forum of The RadioReference.com Forums.

This thread is located at:
http://forums.radioreference.com/digital-voice-decoding-software/191957-java-program-decode-dmr-new-post.html

Here is the message that has just been posted:

Not sure if everyone has seen this document, but its incredibly useful:
http://dmrassociation.org/wp-content/uploads/2012/06/How-DMR-Works-Conventional-Tier-2.pdf
Has lots of good info about frame layout. Skip the first half with all the basic stuff we all know, and you can see all the info about sync and how it carries payloads with FEC etc

Non-P25 Digital Technology Hurts Interoperability Efforts

February 19, 2014

By John Powell

A close examination shows that interoperability is broken into three areas as defined by the five lanes of the Safecom Interoperability Continuum: governance, standard operating procedures, training and exercises, usage and technology. Technology is last because for proper implementation, its selection must be carefully done only after governance is established and operational decisions, including interoperability, are made with regard to how that technology will be implemented and used. Technology's purpose is to support an operation, not drive it.

Who are these "responders?" Beyond the usual three first responders of fire/rescue, EMS and law enforcement, the answer becomes incident driven. How often do you see a Department of Transportation (DOT) vehicle at the scene of a traffic collision? The current ice storms sweeping the East and South quickly add public works, transportation and utilities because all other responders can't move until the roads are clear and safe for passage. Do the three first responders need to be able to communicate directly with these other supporting responders in these situations? The answer is a resounding yes.

From the governance perspective, local and state first responders in the U.S. include more than 70,000 fire/rescue agencies (the majority of them all-volunteer), 85,000 individual law enforcement agencies (often with overlapping jurisdictions), and EMS that includes a wide mix of paid, private (often under contract to governments) and volunteer organizations. Each of these generally budgets and operates independently.

These numbers presents a severe communications interoperability challenge, even under the best of conditions, with routine support from neighboring or overlapping jurisdictions being a daily occurrence. At the same time, the U.S. is rural in nature, having dense population centers, but with more than 50 percent of the actual landmass (particularly west of the Mississippi) being rural to very rural. Throw into that mix the added technology challenge that the U.S. operates in five major radio bands ---VHF low, VHF high, UHF, 700 MHz and 800 MHz. Until the recent introduction of multiband radios (MBRs), users could communicate on at most two of those bands from a single radio with the great majority only having equipment operating in a single band. In spite of these challenges, billions of dollars in public investment generally directed toward improving interoperability has yielded significant improvements during the past 12 years. The fact that pubic safety is now allowing the introduction of incompatible digital technologies to the detriment of those gains has created significant concern among many.

Operationally, the U.S. almost always manages its incidents from the field, a basic tenet of the incident command system (ICS). This requires both wide-area communications for coordination of various responding agencies/units and involved dispatch centers, and on-scene unit-to-unit (off-infrastructure or direct-mode) communications, with responders rapidly switching between the two, preferably using only the channel selector switch on the top of a handset. This latter direct mode capability can present a real challenge in the digital environment, particularly for TDMA systems.

Operational requirements include not only interoperability between field units, but also the ability for those field units to interoperate on neighboring agencies' infrastructure. During emergencies, it is wonderful to have backfill come in to support neighborhoods where stations are empty, but if the guest radios can't operate on the host infrastructure, how can they be dispatched?

Project 25 (P25) technology was designed from the ground up to support the U.S. environment. While it works well in dense urban areas usually supported by large, trunked implementations, it also works well in rural environments for a small agency with its base (or standalone repeater) and 10 mobiles only needing a single 12.5- kilohertz channel for high-quality communications. For those not involved in spectrum management, even those single rural channels can be hard to find, especially in the overtaxed but most used VHF high band.

The widely fielded P25 Phase 1 is a single FDMA talk path per 12.5-kilohertz channel. More recently fielded P25 Phase 2 provides two TDMA talk paths per 12.5-kilohertz channel. Talk path in this discussion can be data or voice, or a combination of the two for TDMA. Importantly, P25 and TETRA equipment use highly tested and refined voice codecs (vocoder) specifically designed for the public-safety environment and not generally found in commercial-grade digital technologies. TDMA is excellent in congested areas, but not wide, rural expanses because of the significant hardened backhaul typically required between base station sites. TETRA and some other non-P25 digital technologies are regularly touted for inexpensive handsets, but handset savings have been found in studies to be quickly eaten up by the more intense interconnected infrastructure required to support those often lower powered (as compared with P25) TDMA handsets, as well as the ongoing operational expenses for backhaul between base stations for wide-area operations.

Many public-safety agencies require multisite wide-area coverage. P25 supports simulcast where a number of sites simultaneously carry the same coordinated signal on a single frequency. Most other digital technologies can't support simulcast, instead using multicast where the same conversation must be carried on one of the two or four TDMA "slices" or a separate FDMA frequency across those multiple sites to cover the required footprint. Because those non-P25 digital technologies can't overlap the same frequencies at nearby sites, this implementation can actually require significantly more spectrum to carry the same number of required wide-area talk paths.

However, from an interoperability perspective, probably the most important feature is high-powered handset on-scene simplex (direct mode) communications that is well supported by P25, with analog mode serving as the fallback common denominator for incident command operations in the U.S. All P25 receivers are inherently dual-mode analog and P25 digital; P25 receivers will automatically present whichever on-channel mode is heard to the radio's speaker. High powered in this case refers to the typical U.S. 3- to 6-watt band-dependent handset that will reliably communicate in simplex mode around an incident scene, including in and out of buildings for applications such as fire ground operations.

Finally, those not intimately involved with the real world of emergency response want to add the "we can hook anything to anything" gateway solution to this mix of RF bands and incompatible technologies. From the seasoned communications unit leader's (COML) perspective, those black boxes are called communications interoperability ending devices (IEDs). First there is the time required to set them up and/or properly engage and manage them; the emergent part of an incident is often over by then. They are also spectrum wasteful with one talk path per band per disparate technology; usually don't pass all features and functions, such as unit ID and emergency trigger, between technologies; and importantly from an untrained user's perspective, only provide coverage where the footprints of all interconnected systems overlap. Thus, gateways can be an indispensable solution when there is no alternative, but are almost always considered by COMLs to be the solution of last resort.

Given all of these concerns, coupled with a number of study cases where the introduction of non-P25 digital systems have been installed with significant negative impact on interoperability, the National Public Safety Telecommunications Council's (NPSTC) Interoperability Committee is examining this issue in detail through its Emerging Digital Radio Technologies (EDRT) Working Group. The working group will release a white paper later this year, with the current findings being that the introduction of non-P25 digital technology almost always results in a significant reduction in interoperability. The solution is beginning to focus on the need for all handsets and all infrastructure to include 12.5-kilohertz analog, in addition to any other technology mode, to properly support interoperability.

Non-P25 Digital for Public Safety: Why Not?

February 19, 2014

By Bruce Marcus

Proponents of Project 25 (P25) cite interoperability as a primary advantage of the protocol. However, consider a very common scenario --- a particular community uses UHF P25, while the neighbor on one side uses VHF P25 and the neighbor on the other side uses 800 MHz P25. How does using the same digital protocol help any of these communities? It doesn't --- it only helps the vendor they purchased the system from.

When it comes to interoperability, analog remains the industry standard. Digital Mobile Radio (DMR) is an advanced and open standard that retains analog functionality for interoperability while offering many advantages over P25.

DMR offers two-slot TDMA technology, simulcast and cross-band communications at low cost, as well as high-level encryption from at least one vendor at no additional charge. P25 offers two slots per channel with Phase 2, but with a tight budget, this is an expensive proposition. Why wait for two-slot capabilities when increasing capacity requirements demand it now, and DMR is significantly more cost effective?

For example, take a congested area where a fire department uses one channel for paging and dispatch. If we installed two-slot DMR, the fire department doubles its capacity and retains analog paging. This new channel can be used to patch cross-band to any other band or protocol for interoperability, using IP gateways, audio bridges, back-to-back radios or dispatch consoles.

The DMR protocol allows for GPS, man-down, ambient listening, text messaging and Tier 3 trunking with or without simulcast. DMR IP67-rated radios with five-year warranties can be purchased for less than $650.

Several vendors are concentrating on production of sub-$1,000 P25/DMR dual-protocol radios. This is great news for public safety --- whichever technology you choose, the future promises increasing digital interoperability. The only question is how much money do you want to spend getting there?

If I had the choice and bandwidth, TETRA is the best protocol for public safety, having four slots per channel and robust data; unfortunately, narrowbanding put a stop to that, with some exceptions.

Any way you slice it, software-defined radio (SDR) is the way to go. May the best, lowest cost and most efficient protocol win. Open standard DMR is a European Telecommunications Standards Institute (ETSI) standard on Tiers 1, 2 and 3 and provides the best choice for competition and price.

EWA Launches App for Frequency Searches (3/24/14)
The Enterprise Wireless Alliance (EWA) will unveil Cevo, the industry's first mobile app for business/industrial and public-safety frequency searches.

Available for Apple and Android devices, the Cevo mobile app displays a series of questions about location, antenna height, power, band and other criteria, including a selection of public safety or business/industrial. After submitting the required information, the user receives a list of available frequencies on the smart phone. It's then a simple step to send the information to a customer for consideration or to EWA for certification.

New P25 ISSI Features Set to Boost Demand

July 02, 2014

By Sandra Wendelken, Editor <mailto:swendelken@...>

Several jurisdictions are looking to integrate the latest version of the Project 25 (P25) Inter Subsystem Interface (ISSI) into their statewide networks. Officials said the latest versions of ISSI products include more functionality and are easier to use than original versions.

The ISSI standard, first commercially implemented in 2010 <http://www.radioresourcemag.com/onlyonline.cfm?OnlyOnlineID=189>, aims to connect disparate P25 networks, regardless of vendor. For example, an ISSI gateway could connect a standalone Motorola Solutions P25 network to a Harris P25 network.

ISSI technology has not been widely deployed for various reasons including cost, complicated manual management and roaming from one P25 system to another, and lack of a Compliance Assessment Program (CAP) for the ISSI standard.

EF Johnson executives said the demand for the ISSI is increasing because of increased competition in the market. "Customers are being educated and learning more about the functionality, and there is more competition in the marketplace," said Arindam Roy, EF Johnson director of product management for systems. "Customers are deploying systems from different vendors. As competition is growing, the need for interoperability between vendors is increasing. The vendors are working together to provide that seamless interoperability."

Roy said that although there are no CAP interoperability tests yet, vendors are working with each other to test their ISSI products. "The vendors are working together to provide that seamless interoperability. As this demand grows and we see more deployments, you'll see there is more push for CAP."

The latest Harris P25 ISSI includes a site adjacency feature that allows radios to automatically roam between Radio Frequency Subsystems (RFSSs), said Tom Burkett, Harris Public Safety and Professional Communications (PSPC) product manager. "This means that the user's radios can now receive the site adjacency information through the ISSI for sites on foreign RFSSs and its home system, which then provides them with information to spread the roaming decisions to sites beyond the home systems," Burkett said. "For example, in the event of a car chase where an officer is traveling down an interstate and leaves his home system range, the officer would just need to focus on the incident and the radio would automatically transition to the new system without any intervention by the officer and he/she would be able to communicate the entire time with dispatch and other responding units. This feature is a large step up from the manual roaming that is available today, which requires that both systems support this feature to enable radios to roam."

Tait Communications has a new ISSI that works between different vendors and will be undertaking further development work to expand support for Phase 2 operation, said Bill Fillman, Tait vice president of market development and solution engineering. EF Johnson's Roy said the EF Johnson ISSI product has all the functionality that is part of the ISSI standard.

Both Missouri and Maryland have plans for the newest version of Motorola's ISSI product, albeit linking one Motorola system to another Motorola system. Motorola's latest product version of the technology eases management requirements, offers seamless roaming between networks and dynamically assigns unit identifications (IDs) compared to its original ISSI.1 product.

/The state of Missouri plans to deploy Motorola's ISSI 8000 system interface later this year to connect its statewide P25 VHF/700 MHz network to the Kansas City (Missouri) Police Department 800 MHz system, which is part of the Metropolitan Area Regional Radio System (MARRS). Motorola supplied both networks, and the upgrade requires both jurisdictions to have Motorola's system 7.13 or a later version./

/In July, the state of Missouri and the Kansas City Police Department are upgrading their P25 systems to 7.14 software. The ISSI packet gateway will be added to each system's master site./

//

/"ISSI.1 was an interim solution," said Steve Devine, assistant director for the Missouri Statewide Interoperability Network (MOSWIN). "It wasn't anyone's perfect solution. It allowed baseband audio to be passed between systems, and roaming between systems required a knob change; there was no seamless transition between the systems. But it provided limited intersystem interoperability when implemented. It wasn't a tool that made intersystem connections and roaming between systems easy from a system administration perspective but it did provide interoperability. Then the goal was to come up with a better ISSI, and that's what we're seeing in ISSI 8000."/

/Devine said the updated ISSI is much easier to manage than the original product. A system administrator can pre-determine the parameters --- unit IDs, talk groups, talk paths and sites --- for one network's users to have access to the other network. The update also includes an option to allow seamless roaming for users, removing the need for users to turn a knob on their radios to move to a neighboring radio system./

The ability for different systems using different system identifiers, regardless of the manufacturer, to be interconnected and promote interoperability is a powerful tool that can allow agencies to leverage all radio investments in their communities, not just those that were built by one agency. Using other agencies' resources for interoperability or daily communications does, however, require the cooperation and approval of the other system administrator and owner, he said.

Devine said going forward that if the jurisdictions upgrade P25 system software at different times, the ISSI technology will still work. "This is the way it's been explained to us," he said. "These are our hopes."

A Maryland First Responders Interoperable Radio System Team (Maryland FiRST) ISSI pilot is planned for mid-2015. The pilot will be with Prince George's County, which deployed a P25 Phase 2 700 MHz system in 2010 and has limited coverage from Maryland FiRST, the statewide network. "This will allow us to test roaming characteristics as radios move from one system to the other," said Ray Lehr, Maryland statewide interoperability director. "Both the county and state have recently upgraded to Motorola's operating software version 7.14, which will allow for us to take advantage of the ISSI 8000 features."

Lehr said communications officers could view the radio alias as well as a notation that a radio has roamed onto the system with Motorola's latest ISSI technology. "This will increase awareness for dispatchers and incident commanders as multiple agencies work together on emergencies," he said. "Maryland believes that this is a substantial benefit from the first-generation product that requires users to make manual changes in talk group selection."

However, Lehr said there are still limitations, including no support for over-the-air programming (OTAP), over-the-air rekeying (OAR) and other features where data-driven functionality is required. "As an example, the ISSI standard does not allow for a radio to be remotely disabled when roaming off of Maryland FiRST," Lehr said. "There are also limitations in the transmission of user location data when roaming from Maryland FiRST and onto a 'foreign' system. These are all important functions to support first responders, which are being addressed."

If the initial pilot of ISSI proves successful, the state can decrease the number of sites it will deploy in other P25 Phase 2 jurisdictions. In Carroll County, for example, state plans originally called for deployment of FiRST equipment at six sites. With ISSI connectivity, the state can reduce that number to three sites in the county and receive a substantial amount of "on street" coverage from sites in surrounding counties. State system users would then only roam onto the Carroll County P25 system when they enter buildings in the county not receiving in-building signals from FiRST.

The state could use the ISSI to link a Motorola system with a Harris network in the future. St. Mary's County has deployed a Harris P25 Phase 2 system and will present the first opportunity to test the upgraded ISSI capabilities between two different vendor's systems.

"We currently operate Motorola APX radios in the Maryland State Police Barrack in St. Mary's County, and they have tested their Harris radios on the MD FiRST system," Lehr said. "While some small programming issues were encountered, both vendors' engineering staff worked cooperatively to resolve those issues, and users are happy with the results of true P25 compatibility for voice transmissions."

Maryland will share its results with other jurisdictions considering the ISSI, Lehr said. RCC Consultants' Director Charles Bryson is the technical lead behind Maryland's ISSI strategy.

"While ISSI is a standard, this does not mean that any given vendor currently supports all functionality, and it will take the support of both vendors to enable any given function," said Tait's Fillman. "The potential impact on traffic capacity of having Phase 1 radios roam on to a Phase 2 network needs to be understood in advance of the roaming, to avoid capacity issues."

963. IWARN License Renewal Fee

Yahoo group: ScanIndiana
Date: 2014-08-07 01:09:28 UTC
From: starcom21@RadioReference.com
Topic: 963 Message: 963

I-WARN was originally for the Illinois Weather Alert Radio Network along with SARMA (Search and Rescue Mutual Aid)

https://fundly.com/iwarn-fcc-license-renewal-fee?noguide=1#

I need to renew my FCC license. I provide frequencies for Search and Rescue teams, Weather Spotters and fire department training.
WQBB433 provides 152.285, 157.545 in bases/mobiles and licensed for one repeater (that is not currently in operation).
These can be used as mobiles, statewide in any part of IL, MO and IN.
wireless2.fcc.gov/UlsApp/UlsSearch/license.jsp?licKey=2653667

I need help with funding to renew license. I paid for the initial Frequency Coordination and FCC fees for both licenses, originally, with help from another sponsor (Tri-State Search and Rescue, at the time)

If your not comfortable with this, or can not help - that is fine.

WQCI585, which provides 155.205 (Public Safety) throughout IL as mobiles and temporary bases (command post)
http://wireless2.fcc.gov/UlsApp/UlsSearch/licenseFreqSum.jsp?licKey=2700990
This license will be up 3/11/15
Thanks for your concern
Terry Weatherford, WX9SAR (formerly N9MAE)

969. Police scanner encryption lawsuit filed

Yahoo group: ScanIndiana
Date: 2014-08-24 02:55:02 UTC
From: KA9QJG@...
Topic: 969 Message: 969

FYI , The Good ol Boys are wasting their Time But I give them a A for Effort ,BUT I do get upset when I see the News or Hear about some alleged bad person A Scanner was found in the Home or Veh SO What good did it do them … I do know that when I worked Law Enforcement in the Streets and 911 Dispatcher ,,,Many times a Listening Scanner users helped ,, Example Off had a Analog Radio Battery was going dead He call for Help Dispatcher did Not hear Him, But the Scanner Listener did and called ,,,,,The Officer got the help needed And many calls come in about looking for wanted people All this unfortunately will Not HAPPEN IF They go Encrypted . The Good outweighs the bad

Happy Scanning ,,, Don KA9QJG

SHERWOOD (KATV) -Police departments in Russellville, Conway, Little Rock and North Little Rock have encrypted radio traffic without a challenge...until now.A lawsuit has been filed that seeks to reopen police communication to everyone again.You might have expected the corporate lawyers who work for KATV or the Democrat Gazette to have filed this lawsuit, but instead it is two brothers from Sherwood who say encrypted radio traffic violates the Freedom of Information Act.

Jeremy Mullens says in other states it has been the media to challenge police departments after a switch to encrypted communication.

"People have sued for access," says Jeremy Mullens. "But they have always stopped because the police have given it to the media. In this case I'm not the media. If they give it to me they're going to have to give it to everybody. The whole public should have it."

Jeremy works as an independent adjuster. His brother Brandon is a truck driver who relies on scanner traffic to help him avoid traffic tie-ups that can delay the delivery of time sensitive cargo.

But he has other reasons to listen in as well.

"If there is a manhunt in my neighborhood...I'd like to know about it before the news picks it up or anybody else," says Brandon Mullens. "First hand information. Unedited. Uncut. It protects myself as well as my family."

The brothers realize that criminals may monitor scanner traffic and that may put police at a disadvantage, but they don't agree it puts them at greater risk.

"It's unfortunate when officers die," says Jeremy Mullens. "Not a single one has been injured or killed due to open radio traffic, anywhere. It's just not anything that I have been able to find. I've looked and I have not been able to find any instances of officers being unsafe because of open radio traffic."

The Mullens brothers don't have an attorney. They are representing themselves in this challenge.

A hearing in Pulaski county circuit court will be set soon.

989. St. Louis police encrypting radio to foil listeners

FYI

Being a Scanner listener for over 50 Yrs and Working Law Enforcement in the Chicago Area I, have always Been against Encrypted Communications Unless Necessary for Sensitive And Surveillance Communications,, But in this Example unfortunately It was Necessary and the Wave of the Future .

PS I worked 911 Communications and the Streets

Responsible Scanner Listeners have called in Things to Help Numerous times and Reported to the Dispatcher about a Unit they did not hear ….

Happy Scanning

ST. LOUIS • The St. Louis police began encrypting their two-way radio communications Friday morning after protesters listened in and reacted to such messages the night before, Chief Sam Dotson said.
Using easily-downloaded smartphone apps and social media, listeners notified protesters about officers' movements and local residents who had called police, Dotson said. They also warned those being sought by police to change their appearance, he said, citing specific Tweets in an interview with the Post-Dispatch Friday afternoon.
“It made it difficult for us to control the situation,” Dotson said, and became a community safety issue.
“We encrypted our radios this morning at 7 a.m.” in response, he said.
Dotson said that police had been mulling the change, starting at or before the 2010 workplace shooting at ABB Inc., when Timothy Hendron killed three and wounded five at the sprawling electrical transformer plant.
Asked why he doesn't encrypt only tactical channels, he again cited the ABB shooting, saying that communications that day went out over the 6th District channel.
The radio calls about Thursday night's protests over the fatal shooting by a police officer of Vonderrit Myers Jr. were going out over the Second District channel, he said.
Dotson said he is concerned about openness and transparency, and said that a password-protected website was being set up to try to keep the news media informed. He also pledged to revisit the issue in a month to measure the effects of the change.
Asked about limiting access by news media, hobbyists and the general public to police information which has traditionally been available, Dotson said he was not comfortable having addresses of crimes and callers overheard by the public.
Across the country, some departments use encryption, some don't and some encrypt only certain communications. No major agencies have used it in the St. Louis area, although Alton police have for years coded certain messages. It has become more feasible as advancing technology and demand for radio bandwidth have moved police to digital radio systems.
An encrypted message will sound garbled on some scanners, or may not be heard at all on others.

Police in many places, including St. Louis, have eliminated much of their radio traffic anyway by using mobile data terminals to send texts. Some also use Nextel, which as a commercial cellphone and two-way radio service is difficult and illegal to monitor. Equipment to decode encrypted signals is not sold to the public, and unauthorized use of it is against federal law.
